There is an extra considered as an opening-wedge with the Southern ordinary looseness of morals prevailing in the community in regard to newspapers. People anon. forget that it is property—as much so as the gold in their purse. The man who reads another's paper without paying for it or without the consent of the owner, may as well steal the money of that other. The property in the newspaper is in its contents. To read it, is to enjoy hat property. We hope these remarks will cause the blood to mount in the cheeks of the intruders in question, that they may see their action in its true light. "Thou shalt not steal." Remember who is the author of this declara tion, and cease stealing your neighbor's property in the National Whig. Come to the ofce, (for we know you cannot do without the National Whig.) and subscribe for it, pay for it in advance, and you will then be able to enjoy the pleasure of reading your own property.
